

Aros's Curious Curios

(Unusual items of minor magic for the deep of pocket.)

Created by Magecraft 10/01/02, mage_craft@lycos.com

This most unusual shop could be found in almost any town, city, or open bazaar as its location generally changes up to twice a week. Wherever there is at least a modest amount of trading, Aros's Curious Curios could be found. The shop appears to be an old knight's pavilion tent, dusty white with faded vertical red stripes circling the entire tent. The entire square structure appears to be no more than 15 feet to a side with only one opening, or flap if you prefer, in the center of the front side. A bright pink pennant flies at the top of the structure while a faded oak sign hangs above the door proclaiming the name of the shop, "Aros's Curious Curios", whose words glow with a faint blue luminescence at night. A tiny wooden corral sits off to the right, no larger than the structure it sits next to. The corral usually contains a small brown horse (4 feet high at the shoulder) with a mane and tail oddly tinted some shade of pastel color, calmly munching on lush grass that grows just inside the corral no matter what the current time of year.

To enter the shop, you pass through a opaque silken curtain covered by tiny silver bells that jingle as you pass through into the dimly lit room beyond. Inside you immediately notice shelves, boxes, crates, displays, and hangers galore that hold an immense assortment of different goods in a tent that seems quite a bit larger than the outside suggests. Signs written in bold-lettered common hang high on the wall and proclaim messages such as: "If you break it, You bought it", "Trades Accepted, Refunds Aren't", "Magic Items- Appraised, Identified, Traded, Sold", and "If you don't like being a Rabbit, Don't think of Stealing." Straight across the way, is a three foot tall counter that seems to be the only unused flat surface in the room, and even it has an odd machine sitting on one end and several tiny bowls filled with rings on the opposite. A glass front face to the counter displays many different colored vials and jars filled with what appears to be hard candy. Within moments of entering the shop, a light voice with slight arabic accent will cry out from somewhere between the shelves, "Salaam, good day, I will be with you in a moment!" Within seconds the voice is followed by what can only be described as an odd looking proprietor. Dressed in robes of some bright color, decorated in flamboyant style with bright comets or moving stars, and topped by an outlandish turban or conical wizard hat is a gentleman whose height cannot be more than four feet tall. Aro Al'hasir O'Keefe as he introduces himself in whatever native language and dialect is normal for each customer, no matter how rare, is a slightly over middle-aged human with a long salt and pepper goatee and wide, spectacled brown eyes. He will bow to each customer, blessing his good fortunes for such wise and noble patrons, and begin to rattle at relatively high speed about the unique nature and benefits of his wares while moving from item to item. If left to browse, customers will find items of almost every sort, all tagged with small strips of white paper attached with string and naming the item and a value beginning with an odd snake-like rune "$". If asked, Aro will describe what he knows about the item, which is almost everything, and quickly convert the value to gold pieces by means of a tiny abacus from his pocket. Any purchases are taken to the counter and after a few button pushes, quickly totaled by the machine on his counter. With a loud "Kaching," the customer's money disappears into the machine and his change comes out into a plate on the side. Change is always received as the local currency for small amounts, gems or trade bars (25 or 50gp value gold or silver bars) for large amounts.

Aro will identify magic items and their properties for a small fee, usually around but no more than 5% of the item's market value. This process is usually quite involved, requiring him to use strange spectacles, tuning forks, drops of odd liquids, and a large book in which he cross references results and looks up the item in question. He has a 90% chance of identifying any magical, magically treated, enspelled item, or artifact, even if it is unique, and the item's general purpose and minor abilities. Anything more in depth requires him to study the item, takes 1 to 8 days, and generally costs around 10% of the item's market value, but cannot be done for artifacts. This process will almost always determine the full capabilities of the magic item in question. He will buy or appraise any type of magic item, no matter what purpose or alignment, at 50-80% of its true market value (the value dependent on how much he likes you). Aro will also trade magic items for anything he has in stock, generally at 75% of the true market value of the item. Lastly, Aro will occasionally have "true" magic items in stock. He will sell these items at 125% of their market value, or at a minimum, their market value. These items have a tendency to have minor quirks, such as looking ragged or having a specific foe it is useless against. Aro will never seem to know about these flaws, but will identify them normally if paid to do so.

Aro will always be courteous, if not down right flattering to any customer but will not talk about himself at all. If a customer is looking for specific magical items, he is always willing to "look around", for a small commission (about 25 gold). He has a large undisclosed network through which he can usually find almost any magic item as long as it is not unique or overly rare (DM's discretion). Aro is always a favorite with the local children as he gives out free candy and other small items from his shop, but always remembers who has already gotten some. Thieves, purposeful or not, find themselves unable to leave the store as the front curtain seems to be immovable and chimes loudly when touched by an individual carrying anything not paid for. If the item is quickly replaced or paid for, Aro will seem not to notice. If the customer seems to still be shopping and looks innocent, Aro will nonchalantly bring up his wonderful signs in conversation or while talking to himself (which he does quite often). However, if the "customer" fights with the curtain or gets malicious in any way, Aro will calmly point at the offender with the large ruby ring on his finger. Failure to save (Will save DC 30, Caster Level 30), will find the offender as a cute and fuzzy rabbit in the midst of all their possessions. After a two day intern as a diminutive mammal in a petting cage, they will be released minus fifty gold and the offending item(s) and will find themselves about two miles outside of the town or city they reside with a ear-splitting pop and cloud of green smoke. Offenders always seem to have a hard time finding Aros afterwards. Violence in his store is always responded to in the same manner, as Aro detests violence. Should anyone fail to be transformed, or attempt to harm Aro in any way, they will find him to be quite well protected (it is a magic shop after all), and with just a command the entire shop can blink away leaving only the offenders behind.

The items listed below are ones commonly stocked by Aros's shop. He will normally have several of each item, often even more on hand at any time. If an item has a command word, it will normally be inscribed on the object or will be given to the owner when purchased. Aro also has in stock a large supply of material components for nearly any spell, and if he does not have it, he can arrange to have it in up to two days.
